Deckhand Nelson Escaped Death on a Burning Dredge.

Tugs Rescued Him and Put Out the Flames.

Terrific Dynamite Explosion Narrowly Averted.

United States dredge No. 5 was almost destroyed by fire while anchored in Hell Gate early this morning, and Olof Nelson, a deck-hand, was badly burned while trying to extinguish the flames.

Nelson was alone on the dredge, asleep in his bunk, when the fire broke out, about 12 m. this morning.

According to his story, the crackling of the flames and the smoke awakened him, and rushing from his bunk he attempted to put out the fire.

It was a losing fight, however, and Nelson came near losing his life in the attempt.

The blazing dredge was seen by the pilots of the tug "Charles Livingston" and "John C. Jones," which steamed along side and began pumping water into her.

They were unable to get the flames under control, however, and the dredge became a complete wreck.

Nelson was taken ashore and to the East Eighty-eighth street police station, whence he was sent to the Presbyterian Hospital.

He was badly burned about the head, hands and feet. He is twenty-eight years old.

The flames from the burning dredge lighted the river front, and the firebrands at first thought a vessel was on fire.

While the dredge was burning, great smoke, vapor and possible loss of life was averted by the presence of mind of three of the men on the Government steamer "U.S.A."

The dredge and drill were moored near Middle Reef, and the General S. Norton had on board 900 pounds of dynamite.

In the excitement the fire was discovered.

Edward Hudson, Michael Fullerton and James Higgins, of the Norton, and threw the explosive into East River. Had they done so the institutions on Ward's Island would have been blown to pieces.

The dredge and drill have lately been in operation at North Brother Island under authority of the Commercial and United States Engineering Corps.

The dredge was commanded by Capt. Lawrence Quinn, who was unable to account for the fire.

DETECTIVES AT WORK.

Coffee Poisoning of the Marcos and Rosencaks Being Investigated.

The police of the Sixteenth Precinct, Williamsburg, were instructed by Coroner Cremer to-day to thoroughly investigate the case of the Marcos family, who were poisoned after drinking coffee, and one of whom has since died.

At the same time Dr. Francis was directed to hold an autopsy on the body of Mrs. Rebecca Marcos, the victim.

Dr. Lee, who attended the woman, said he had not prescribed an amount of copper for her.

She also says that there is no poison in the house, and it is a mystery how the coffee became contaminated.

Mrs. Marcos, who was ill, was given a glass of water by her stepmother, Mrs. Rosencak, with whom she and her husband lived at 311 Wallabout street, and to reassure her all the people in the room drank of it.

Within a few minutes Mr. Marcos took some of the coffee to a druggist, who said there was arsenic of copper in it.

A physician was summoned, but Mrs. Marcos died later in terrible agony.

Cassidy Perhaps Fatally Wounded by His Brother-in-Law.

Hed Was Protecting His Sister from Her Brutal Husband.

A bloody fight occurred shortly after midnight this morning on the top floor of the tenement 365 Baltic street, Brooklyn.

Thomas Doran, a laborer, twenty-nine years old, attacked his brother-in-law, Thomas Cassidy, with a knife, and stabbed him four times. The blade entered his neck, back and head. The wound in the head is the most dangerous, and the surgeons say the case may prove a murder.

The knife was driven into Cassidy's head with such force that it fractured his skull.

Doran was out with friends last night, and it is said, he was intoxicated when he reached home.

He begged to absolve his wife. When his brother, Cassidy, reached home, Mr. Doran appealed to him for protection. Cassidy and Doran renewed the quarrel, and Cassidy struck his brother-in-law in the face with his fist.

Then Doran drew a big knife from his pocket and made a savage attack upon his opponent.

Cassidy failed to get possession of the knife, but Doran stabbed him until he fell unconscious.
